CIRCUSTALK LAUNCHES ONLINE SHOW AND CLASS TOOLS PLUS WEEKLY ONLINE INDUSTRY PANEL DISCUSSIONS

- Also Offers COVID Resource Page and 2-Month Free PRO Membership -

NEW YORK – CircusTalk, the leading online professional network and resource for the international circus arts, has launched a new tool on their website today for users to add online shows and classes. This new virtual feature offers artists and companies a way to generate income or donations during the coronavirus quarantine and mandated social distancing.

CircusTalk members now can share online livestream and on-demand shows and classes with the circus community and the wider audience, and collect payment through the CircusTalk platform. “While this service offers an alternative income source for artists and companies in social distancing, it also provides an opportunity for the international circus community to reach the recreational circus market and the public at-large and bring more awareness to circus as an art form,” says CircusTalk co-founder, Andrea Honis.

In addition, CircusTalk launched “Circus and Changing Realities 2020,” a curated set of free online panel discussions to continue a global conversation about the circus sector, to understand the challenges and to collaborate on industry sustainability. Upcoming panels cover circus in Latin America, circus presenters looking forward, adaptation and sustainability in circus, circus infrastructure, perspectives of circus graduates and much more. Panels are accessible via the CircusTalk News and Event pages, and new panel proposals are also encouraged.

For the panel series, CircusTalk partnered with The Circus Arts Hub (TCAH), the brainchild of Australia’s Antonella Casella, senior artistic director of Circus Oz. She used pandemic downtime to set up new, creative ways for circus artists and producers to connect. The two organizations are also facilitating ongoing conversations about circus arts and sector development, and planning for the future.

Launched in June 2017, CircusTalk.com has reached over half a million visitors worldwide, and shares news, job opportunities and events among performers, educators, schools, organizations, federations, associations and regional networks. Members are from 193 countries spanning five continents.

CircusTalk’s mission has always been to provide resources and opportunities to connect, and, since the COVID outbreak, has supported the circus community with a resource page and a 2-month free PRO membership.
